1. Ms. Maxwell, during the February 7, 2019 hearing, the Office of Refugee Resettlement and Office of the Inspector General officials described the criteria used to separate children from parents. These determinations are typically made in cases where officials find that the parents may pose a danger to the child. Based on your experiences:
 - a. How is this determination made and by whom?
 - b. What constitutes a “danger” to a child? Please provide specific examples.
 - c. Is any criminal history, including immigration offenses, grounds for separation?
 - d. What process, if any, exists for parents or child advocates to challenge a decision to separate the parent and child?

The Honorable Joseph P. Kennedy, III (D-MA)

1. Thank you for sharing your testimony regarding the separation of children from their families along the southern border. In your testimony, you mentioned that DHS has provided limited data and information to ORR regarding the separated children, thus complicating HHS's efforts to identify and track the children in compliance with the 2018 court order. As a part of ORR's efforts to identify and track the children, what additional information does ORR need from DHS?
 - a. Can you provide the key information and demographics ORR currently tracks for the separated children and for all children in the agency's care?
 - b. Beyond the country from which the children have migrated, does ORR track the city, town, village, or other locale where they previously lived; and, if so, how does ORR share this information with other agencies and Congress in order to promote and improve the use of international aid?

The Honorable Greg Walden (R-OR)

1. According to the HHS OIG's January 2019 Issue Brief, 118 children have been separated from a parent or a legal guardian between July 1 and November 7, 2018. According to the OIG, 65 of the children were separated because a parent had a criminal history, 18 children were separated because the parent had a gang affiliation, and 19 children were separated because the parent presented a false passport or claimed to be a legal guardian without proof, among other reasons. OIG cautioned, however, that "in some cases, little detail was provided" to ORR.
 - a. In how many of the 118 cases of children separated from a parent between July 1 and November 7 did DHS not provide enough information to ORR?
 - b. What types of information was not provided to HHS, and how often was each type of information not provided?
 - c. Did HHS OIG interact with DHS on this issue in an attempt to determine why, in your opinion, sufficient information was not provided in all cases?
